BACKGROUND AND DISCUSSION

Napa County has for many years been committed to the conservation of natural resources and has been at the forefront of both protecting agricultural land and providing for the conservation of sensitive resources including groundwater, soils, water quality, fisheries, wildlife, and important plants species and their habitats.

The County's Conservation Regulations, adopted by the Board of Supervisors in 1991, established procedures for the review of projects that might have an effect on water quality or other natural resources and were intended to protect the public health, safety and community welfare, and to otherwise preserve the natural resource of the County. In addition, the Conservation Regulations were intended to ensure the continued long-term viability of agricultural resources by protecting lands for excessive soil loss, which if left unprotected could threaten water quality and ultimately lead to loss of economic productivity.

While the Conservation Regulations require review of all projects involving grading and earthwork activities, the presentation will focus primarily on the sections of the Conservation Regulations that apply to projects that come before the Commission for consideration and approval. The presentation will not be on potential policy changes or updates to the Conservation Regulations.
